CONVERSATIONS &

COLLABORATIONS

We believe the future isn't something that simply happens to us. It is shaped by the ideas we cultivate, the relationships we build and the questions we choose to explore.

WHY THIS

Work

We want the future to be one where people and nature flourish together. Through writing, research and conversations, we explore the conditions that make that possible.

Current Enquiries

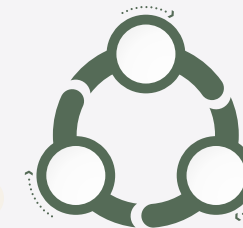

Conditions for flourishing

What allows people, communities and the living world to thrive together.

Ecological Relationship

Reimagining our relationship with the more-than-human world.

Leadership in Times of Transition

Rethinking leadership for an age of ecological and cultural change.

Second Spring

Exploring the potential of life after menopause, personally, culturally and collectively.

Belonging

How we create cultures and communities where everyone can belong.

The Future of Knowledge & AI

Stewarding original knowledge in the age of abundant knowledge.

HOW WE CAN WORK Together

Conversations

Some of the most important questions of our time cannot be answered by a single discipline, organisation or perspective alone. They require thoughtful conversation, spaces where ideas can meet, assumptions can be questioned, and new possibilities can emerge.

My work explores the conditions that help people and nature flourish together. Through keynote talks, panel discussions and facilitated conversations, I invite audiences to think more deeply about the questions shaping our collective future, from leadership and belonging to ecological stewardship, women's transitions and the future of knowledge.

Whether speaking at conferences, festivals, organisational events or podcasts, my aim is not simply to provide answers, but to create conversations that continue long after the event itself.

Podcast Conversations

Conversation has always been at the heart of my work. As a podcast host, I have explored leadership, regeneration and cultural change through Practical Changemakers, The She Changes Podcast, and as co-host of Avalon Sacred Groves. These conversations bring together diverse perspectives, creating space for curiosity, careful listening and the exchange of ideas that help us better understand ourselves, one another and the living world.

HOW WE CAN WORK Together

Collaborations

Some of the most meaningful work happens when organisations, communities and researchers come together around questions that matter.

I enjoy collaborating with people who are exploring the conditions that help people and nature flourish together. Whether through independent qualitative research, commissioned writing, strategic enquiry or interdisciplinary partnerships, I bring curiosity, careful listening and a systems perspective to every collaboration.

My work sits at the intersection of leadership, belonging, women's transitions, ecological stewardship and the future of knowledge. While each project is unique, they are all connected by a shared commitment to understanding what enables people, communities and the living world to thrive.

If you're developing a research project, exploring a complex question, or looking for a thoughtful collaborator, I'd be delighted to start a conversation.

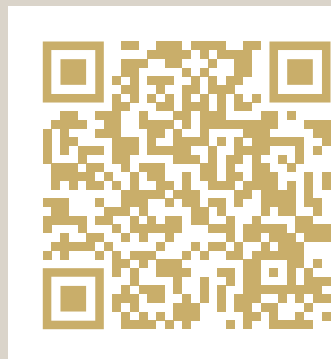

THE PATH THAT LED HERE

About Louise - Marlana

For more than twenty-five years I worked in executive leadership across environmental restoration, sustainability, finance and organisational development. A Master's in Transpersonal Psychology broadened that experience, leading me to explore not only how organisations function, but how people, communities and the living world flourish.

Today those experiences inform my work as a writer, qualitative researcher and speaker, exploring the conditions that help people and nature flourish together.
